CAREER OF THE WEEK

Computer game developers create video games for phones, tablets, PCs and consoles

You can get into this job through:

- A University course
- College course
- An Apprenticeship

Career Progression

With experience you could become a senior developer, producer or technical director.

If you have a lot of skills and experience, you could become a freelance developer, working on games for a number of different companies.

UNIVERSITY

You could do a foundation degree or degree in:

- computer games design
- computer games development
- computer science
- interactive media
- mathematics

If you'd like a job that includes game design as well as programming, you could do a foundation degree or degree in a subject like animation or graphic design.

You may have an advantage when you look for work if you do a degree that includes a work placement.

COLLEGE

You could do a college course before moving on to a higher level qualification. It may help you to get a trainee position with a development company.

Courses include:

- computing
- creative media and games development
- T Level in Digital Production, Design and Development

Day to day tasks

As a games developer, you could work in a number of specialisms from gameplay programming to virtual reality (VR). You could:

- work with level designers and graphic artists
- decide what a game will look like and how it will be played
- create concept art, drawings or storyboards at the planning stage
- use computer modelling and animation software to make characters and scenes
- add audio and sound effects
- write code to programme the game
- fix problems and 'bugs' that testers have found

If you would like more information contact Mr Bowles (gbowles@theangmeringschool.co.uk).
